

Matthew Marcum

Mentoring Advocate, Social Impact Executive

Matthew is the founder and CEO of Mentoring Partners of Cincinnati, a non-profit program serving high school students and their families. MPC's mission is to provide an adult mentor for each high school teen along his/her path to adulthood and maturity. Mentors model friendship to guide teens in building a network of healthy relationships. They also help teens explore their career vision as well as develop a foundation of core beliefs. Since 2015, he has been equipping servant leaders.

Matthew formerly served as a Registered Nurse in the field of hospice (end-of-life care). In that role, he learned how to impact people medically while also adapting his advocacy to meet the needs of diverse cultures, ethnicities, poverty levels, etc.

He earned his bachelor's degree in Nursing Education from Excelsior College in Albany, New York.

Matthew is married and has 7 children, two of whom are adopted—one from Ethiopia and another from Russia. His interests include competitive sports, outdoor activities, traveling, and performing music with his wife and daughters. Their family runs a 10-acre homestead farm.
