

Jack Horvath

Product Supply Chain Executive, Consultant

Jack is a retired executive with nearly 40 years of experience at Procter and Gamble and Goodyear Tire and Rubber companies. He has been a leader in global operations of internal and external end-to-end supply chains and has a proven history of delivering business results through strategic business and technical leadership, transformation of operations, and strengthening organizational capabilities.

Jack was trained as a chemical engineer at Purdue University with post-graduate work at University of Michigan, Northwestern University, and the University of Tennessee. At P&G for 37+ years, he had responsibilities across multiple business units, locations, and regional and global markets. He started in US manufacturing, rose to Plant Manager, then, in Costa Rica, became site leader for the Global Business Services start-up operation, which supported all of North & South America. After that, he held global leadership positions for more than 15 years in External Supply Operations, Oral Care Technical Support, and Product Supply Chain.

Jack serves in numerous community leadership positions and on various for-profit and non-profit boards. He is also a coach in various youth sports programs. He and his wife, Carol, have three children and many cats and dogs. He is an advanced certified scuba diver, an avid sport shooter, a volunteer with Habitat for Humanity, a global traveler to more than 45 countries, and an emerging gourmet chef.
