

Steve Simpson

Consultant, Product Supply Executive

Steve had a 33-year career with Procter & Gamble in Product Supply Management, Engineering, and Manufacturing. He has diverse consulting and advising experiences, including domestic and international, and within and outside of P&G. Starting with a technical focus as an electrical engineer, he developed expertise in project management, organizational improvement, and team leadership. Much of his focus was on improving both production processes (reliability, quality, startups) and administrative work processes.

Steve lives in Cincinnati but has also lived in various manufacturing locations in the US as well as abroad (Japan).

Since retiring from P&G in 2007, Steve spends his time consulting with both for-profit and non-profit organizations in improving results through clear strategy development, organizational strengthening, team building, and problem solving. He also spends much of his time mentoring young professionals in their careers and personal lives.
